Leviathan (Hobbes book) - Wikipedia

Thomas Hobbes (1588–1679). Hobbes thought “Man was motivated by his appetites, desires, fear and self-interest, seeking pleasure and avoiding pain .His main desire, and the most important of natural laws, was self-preservation and the avoidance of death” Hobbes’ assertion would become the foundation for capitalism, which espouses an exclusive rather than inclusive nature of people.

Rights and equality are yet two other dividing points between Hobbes and Locke. Based on Hobbes' theories there is little to nothing defining right and wrong except for what the individual, in the state of nature, or the state, in society, decides. There is only one natural right, and that is the right of self preservation (Deutsch, p. 263).
