The more subtle and exact the poem is, the more fully realized the readers' experience will be. I've written poetry and fiction, and for me, there are two separate writing processes. For poetry, I find I need to hear a word or phrase that sticks in my brain and starts calling forth images, sounds, impressions, memories.

The Difference Between Poetry and Fiction | Be Your Note

A major aim in poetry is to either create emotion or make it stronger. Fiction writers can do this as well, stir emotions. And while there are several methods for creating emotional responses in readers, word choice is a potent one. Choosing words for their emotional impact is one more way to introduce the poetic into fiction.
